Nearly 65 of the world's most knowledgeable experts in the field of American Indian antiques will gather in Santa Fe for the fourth annual Antique American Indian Art Show, taking place at El Museo Cultural de Santa Fe, located in the city's Railyard district. This year's event will feature a special exhibition from Mark Sublette Medicine Man Gallery titled Homage to the Square, a display of early Navajo rugs and blankets.

"The room is full of people who know the art historical side of these works," says Kim Martindale, the show's co-producer. "We have attracted the major traders in the field who have the best available material in the world. There is no question that this is the greatest gathering of historic American Indian art in the world."

Terry DeWald, owner of Terry DeWald American Indian Art, helped set up the first show and has participated in every event since the show opened four years ago. He will bring a variety of baskets and Navajo weavings, including an Apache figural olla and a Navajo pictorial Germantown rug featuring metaphysical father, son and mother figures.

Indian market," say Bruce and Ilene Johnson of Mystic Warriors. "The Antique American Indian Art Show allows buyer and sellers of the finest material to be together in one place in a very beautiful atmosphere."

Barry Walsh of Buffalo Barry's Indian Art will bring katsinas as well as Plateau beaded bags to the show. He says, "The Antique American Indian Art Show has become the go-to Native antiquities show during the Santa Fe season. It has the most diverse, authentic and profound material available. The show is high energy with seasoned collectors and experts mingling with eager novices. For us, the show feels like a valued reunion."

Native American Art is a proud media sponsor of the Antique American Indian Art Show, which kicks off Tuesday, August 15 with an opening gala from 6 to 9 p.m. The proceeds from the gala will benefit New Mexico PBS. The show continues from August 16 to 18, with regular hours from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. ❧
